

M'GOVERN ATTACKS

THE CONSTITUTION?

Governor of Wisconsin Makes Startling Statement at the Denver Gathering of Governors.

Governor McGovern, chief executive of Wisconsin and aspirant for the senatorial seat of Hon. Isaac Stephenson, threw a bomb shell into the camp of the governors' conference at Denver on last Friday night on the closing hours of the convention. According to dispatches Governor McGovern declared that the checks and balances provided in the United States constitution exist only to prevent the people from getting what they want quickly and denouncing the constitution as "the most beautiful scheme ever devised to enable legislators to do nothing." Governor Francis E. McGovern of Wisconsin today threw the governors' conference into an uproar in the closing hour of the session.

His startling utterances followed a long discussion concerning the desirability of reducing state legislatures to small one-house bodies and making them more responsive to the people's will. Several southern executives had defended the present system and Governor Spry of Utah had proclaimed himself a standpatter who believed that the men who wrote the constitution were inspired and their doctrine of representative government divine. "I'm not one of those who believe any such thing," announced McGovern. "The constitution provided checks and balances. What for? Simply to hamper the people in getting what they wanted quickly."

"It is the most beautiful scheme to enable legislators to do nothing that has ever been devised."

"I'm heartily in favor of small legislatures, members to be paid respectable salaries and made so directly responsible to the people that they will not dare disobey the instructions indicated by the votes. The first great fear of the common people is of giant combinations of capital for the exploitation of men, women and children. You men who hide behind the skirts of tradition are begging the issue. Unless you make your state governments efficient defenders of the common right against special privilege, you won't be so interested in efficiency after another election or two."

"Those of you who stand by the old order virtually say you are willing the people shall be poorly armed for the war between the average man and the man and organized capital. You must have your legislation on right principles and see that it is passed with the good of the mass of humanity always paramount."

Govs. Hodge of Kansas, Hunt of Arizona and Dunne of Illinois backed up McGovern. Nearly every other executive refused to support the reduction program.

Gov. Edward F. Dunne, Illinois, predicted that within a few years there will not be a state in the union but which will have a public utility commission, empowered by law to control the service and rates of the corporations of the state. He reviewed the history of state control of utilities beginning with New York and Wisconsin.

The Wisconsin law, explained the governor, has been the guide for most of the states, including Illinois. It has been pronounced by many of the advanced thinkers of the day as the best and fairest law ever enacted for the control of public utilities.

The executive committee of the governors' conference, consisting of Govs. McGovern, O'Neal and Ammons, was re-elected. M. C. Riley, Madison, Wis., was chosen secretary again. The house of governors has no president.

THE BLACKSMITH

By GEORGE FITCH, Author of "At Good Old Siwash."

THE blacksmith is a healthy man with large hairy arms who beats his way through life.

However, one would approach the blacksmith for beating his way—not even a large man who had large hairy arms himself. The blacksmith is held in the highest respect because he doesn't beat his fellow man but devotes his earnest attention to beating up iron bars and rods.

It takes a blacksmith about ten hours a day to beat his way successfully. After he has handled a large headed hammer for a few years he becomes very broad across the chest and capable in the shoulders. Very few men amuse themselves by plugging a blacksmith. While everyone does not always agree with him he is generally agreed with very politely. Only a reckless and hair-brained citizen would wander from the tariff to the ancestry of his opponent while arguing with a blacksmith.

The blacksmith stands all day before his forge heating iron red hot and then beating it up with a hammer. When he isn't doing this he is persuading a nervous and embarrassed horse to lift up its off hind legs and be shod. Nothing is more impressive to the layman than to see a blacksmith pick up one corner of a large hot red iron shoe on it in spite of the animal's objection. The blacksmith holds the foot in his lap while doing this, but if the amateur tried the job this said hoof would be extracted from his stomach by a coroner's jury with appropriate ceremonies.

The blacksmith is an honest man who has no chance to bond his business for one thousand times its worth. He does not grow rich, and while others tell blithely in soft seats chairs he must stand at his forge bathing himself in sparks and now and then picking up a red hot horse foot by mistake. No blacksmith has as yet become president. On the other hand, practically no blacksmiths are arrested for littering on the street corners of our cities with their flaking carcasses. If the world were filled with blacksmiths the shortage of soap would be something awful and art would suffer a swift decline, but it would be a better world than it is if it were carrying an excess cargo of spectators, hydraulic millionaires or automobile speeders.

ESCAPE MOMENT

What's the Use.
I bet upon a handsome horse.
One that looked good to me.
The prettiest one upon the course;
The odds were good to see.
I bet all of the coin I had,
And then I stood aghast—
That prettiest horse went to the bad.
Oh, yes! He finished last.

Next day I picked a piebald nag,
The smallest one on the track.
I thought he'd surely con the swag
And win my money back.
He got, I think, two half way round—
The memory gives me pain—
He was down and under the ground,
And I was stung again.

I guess that horses are like men,
Yes, quite a large amount.
They'll win or lose, you can't tell
When they're running.

Looks never seem to count.

According to Uncle Abner.

When a looking glass falls and breaks it is a sign of bad luck, especially if it has a heavy gilt frame and happens to hit you on the head. It takes a woman longer to buy half a yard of blue baby ribbon than it does a man to buy a house and lot, including steam yacht and an ice cream freezer, but she always gets her money's worth.

It is pretty tough to build a $4,000,000 battleship and when you get it done discover that it is four years behind the style.

There are a good many different kinds of mollycoddles but they all wear ice cream suits and make cigars.

When I see our village milliner's upper lip all black I make up my mind there has been some drummer along that has got a dyed mustache. It seems as though in our neighborhood everybody enjoys a funeral thoroughly except the late defunct.

It's gettin' so in this climate a feller dassent say it is a nice day without knockin' on wood.

There is only one thing that sticks closer to a feller than a brother, and that is a rum blossom.

The Diary of the Bonehead.

I was apparently a well man when the fiend in human shape threw a yacker medicine almanac onto my front porch about a week ago.

Having nothing else to read, I glanced through the thing and read the symptoms which are supposed to precede or accompany every ailment under the sun from spavin to house maid's knee.

A man who reads patent medicine advertising matter is a fool.

I felt so good before I picked up that patent medicine literature that I could hardly keep my feet on the ground. I hadn't felt so well in twenty years.

After I had read the medicine literature for fifteen minutes, I was in a daze. After a half hour, I was a sick man and a candidate for the hospital at $50 a week for board and room and $25 a week extra for special nurse.

According to the symptoms named in the book, I had not only one ailment but I had forty, some of them incurable. Any one of the incurable ones was enough to kill me within a week. So far as illness was concerned, I was a versatile man. I had all of them.

After sizing the matter up in the calm light of reason, I had very strong symptoms of grip, ringbone, pin, jaundice, glanders, spring halt, tuberculosis, appendicitis, lumbago,

LIGHTNING WORST IN COUNTRY DISTRICTS

City Dweller Relatively Safe—Trees and Wire Fences Are Most Dangerous.

After the severe storms of the past fortnight and the loss of life and property from the lightning, some of the conclusions of the weather bureau are of special interest.

For instance, Professor Alfred J. Henry, of the weather bureau, states that if the phenomenon of lightning were better understood, perhaps the enormous toll it exacts in life and property would be less. Carefully compared statistics show that in the United States between 700 and 800 persons are killed annually and twice that number injured by lightning.

Strangely to say, this great loss of life falls largely upon people who live away from the centers of population, so that a city dweller is safer during a severe storm than one who lives in the country.

Trees Are Dangerous.
The area within the storm cloud is what may be called a danger zone. Within this zone almost any upright object, especially a tree, is a better conductor of electricity than the air itself, and consequently liable to lightning stroke. For this reason to take refuge under a tree is a dangerous proceeding.

Other places to avoid are near chimneys or fireplaces and in close proximity to wire fences. The latter should be grounded at every fifth post. To successfully ground a wire fence it is only necessary to attach to the fence post, with staples, a piece of galvanized wire so that some part of this wire will come into actual mechanical contact with the fence wire and extend about 2 feet into the ground. A 2 foot of lightning which may fall upon a wire thus grounded will be quickly carried to the earth and rendered harmless.

Protect Farm Buildings.
Churches, ordinary farm buildings, etc., are not difficult to protect from lightning in the great majority of cases. How to do it is fully described in farmers' bulletins No. 367, which may be obtained by addressing the secretary of agriculture at Washington.

A tin roof is a good protection to any building. Buildings with such roofs usually have the down-spouts to carry away the rain, and they serve to conduct the discharge of lightning to the earth. For this reason it is very dangerous to handle such a spout during a thunderstorm.

Clinton, Aug. 30.—The representatives of the C. M. & St. P. Ry. and the W. & N. Ry. met with a part of the village board here Wednesday in J. P. Koehmer's office in conference relative to moving the two stockyards to a more sanitary place. No decision was reached, but it may develop into a union stockyard to be located on the old "Y" south of the depot. If each road builds separately they will be located a quarter of a mile east and west of the village limits. The location south of the depot would certainly be an eye sore and spoil the view down Main street.

A BOW TO LABOR.

(Contributed.) This day shall the nation pause, And ponder on the thought: "It is work of brain or hand By which all things are wrought." Let the laborer lift up his head: He is a great power on the earth; United work keeps the nation alive, Let him consider his worth. It is not the kind of labor, But the spirit with which we work, That ennobles toil, and raises it From a task we would gladly shirk. So here's to honest labor, Whether of hand or mind. It all fits in with God's great plan For the good of all mankind.

LABOR CELEBRATES.

Today is Labor day and organized labor throughout the country celebrates. While organized labor is celebrating the great army of workers, not members of unions, also enjoy a day of rest dedicated to those who toil. It is created by congress and is observed in every state in the union. In Wisconsin today marks the putting in force of the amended workmen's compensation act. Under its provisions, every employer of four or more people must go under the act, or else he will have practically no defense to an action for damages because of an employee being injured. Further he must either take out liability insurance, or prove to the industrial commission that he is able to carry his own insurance, in which case the commission may give him a permit so to do.

The penalty for not complying with the law is severe. Most employers will deem it advisable to take out insurance. Those who are wealthy can file a statement of their ability to pay losses, and get a permit from the state authorities to carry his own insurance if one wishes.

The new law is causing consternation in the rural districts where all labor legislation has been enjoyed by employers on the strength that "the big fellow was getting it." But the legislator, proposes that the persons who work for a poor man shall have the chance of collecting indemnity in case of accident, the same as the employe of a big concern.

The indemnity insurance companies are doing a big business just now, because of the law.

They say that C. D. Rosa of Beloit has the congressional bee in his bonnet and may decide to make the race against H. A. Cooper for the republican nomination at the primaries in September, 1914. There have been many who have been stung by the same bee in times past with unfortunate results.

Janesville may have a new municipal judge inside the next twenty-four hours, if Governor McGovern makes up his mind whom to appoint. Meanwhile there is no judicial authority before which a man accused of a crime can be tried.

School begins tomorrow. The vacation days for the small boys and girls is over, the worry of the parent ended and the three R's will now be taken from the shelves and carefully dusted for active use.

If John Lind succeeds in his mission in Mexico, President Wilson might be prevailed upon to lend him for British use as envoy extraordinary to Mrs. Pankhurst.

It might with propriety be suggested to the senators and representatives that before they dictate further how newspapers shall be run, they try their hand on the 'stemed old congressional record.

It is asserted that Andrew Carnegie is a voter in Scotland as well as in Pittsburgh. If he gets a few more votes perhaps he will in time be able to put through his world-wide peace program.

The health officer of Chicago says kissing is not dangerous if kept within reasonable bounds. The darkest corner of the veranda, for instance.

Huerta thinks this country is not solidly back of Mr. Wilson in regard to Mexico. But all he has to do to find out is to start something.

One thing the country is anxiously waiting for is Governor Foss' announcement of how long he intends to be a republican this time.

Probably Washington can spare Secretary Bryan long enough for him to deliver one of his justly celebrated peace lectures in Albany.

Harry Thaw wrote some poetry, but threw it into the waste paper basket. And still there are people who claim he is insane.

And what has Secretary Bryan to say about the announced intention of Ambassador Wilson to go upon the lecture platform?

Nat Goodwin says he is now wedded to literature. In which case the public will not object to another divorce.

Senor Huerta really ought to jump at the chance to prove himself superhuman by consenting to his own elimination.

Harry Thaw, by now, is certainly in a position to tell a good many interesting things about the bar—both kinds.

Texas intends spending $1,000,000 on its roads this year. Thereby making it easier for people to get out.

"Congress and the president are laboring with the country." And the country surely feels that way.

Secretary Bryan need not worry. The chautauqua circuit is being taken care of by Doc Cook.

It might help Huerta's case some if he could find it consistent to recognize the state of New York.

Brand Whitlock says he will never be mayor of Toledo again. Somebody must have told him.

Huerta's diplomacy is neither shirt-sleeve, dollar nor grape juice. It's just Mexican.

Pockets for women? Where in the latest "creation" will they be able to put them?

Heart to Heart Talks

By JAMES A. EDGERTON

REALITY AND COUNTERFEIT.

Some people object to the word "goodness" or say they do, but down in his inmost heart there is no human being who objects to the reality of what that word means.

What he does object to perhaps is the way in which the term is used and the character of some who use it. In this he is at least partly right.

The way to preach goodness is to live it. That is infinitely better than all the words about it. An ounce of good works is better than a ton of good words. The change of one letter here means all the difference between promise and performance.

The trouble with many who talk of goodness is that they do it in a way that sounds like a reproach. That is not goodness. It is self righteousness and condemnation.

Others use the word as a cloak. They are hypocrites.

Yet let us not make the mistake of rejecting the right because some hypocrite loudly professes it. We must only learn to discriminate between the genuine and the counterfeit.

Because some one passes a bad coin on us is no reason that we should thereafter refuse good money. Because one chair breaks under us is no reason that we should resolve never to sit again. Because one friend proves false is no reason that we should conclude there is no true friendship. Because there are some hypocrites is no reason that we should reject truth or sincere people.

The world is as full of goodness as it is of sunshine. In his heart of hearts every one wants to be good.

I want to be good, and I have no false shame in saying it before the world. I fall far short of the mark, but this is only stumbling in the path. Despite all the missteps, there ever sings a little song in my heart. "I want to be good, I want to be good."

So do you. Now, honor bright, don't you?

We may not agree in all our standards; but, according to our own lights, we want to do the right thing.

Of course we do.

Well, then, let's do it. Why not?

But let's don't talk about it; let's live it.

One being who lives goodness has a better effect on others than a thousand sermons. I know this because I have seen it work, and you know it.

The goodness that is talked about is often a counterfeit, but the goodness that is lived is the true coin.

ALFREDA JACKSON CALLED BY DEATH

PASSED AWAY AT HIS HOME SUNDAY AFTERNOON AFTER MONTH'S ILLNESS.

A LONG USEFUL LIFE

One of the leading Legal Lights of the State goes to His Last Rest—Funeral on Wednesday.

Sunday afternoon, Alfred A. Jackson, a resident of Janesville, since 1855, one of the oldest practicing attorneys at the bar of the state, former Mayor of the city and for many years president of the state bar association, passed to the world beyond after an illness which has kept him confined to his bed for the past month. In Mr. Jackson's death Janesville loses one of its older residents, the legal profession one of its most brilliant members, his family a loving husband and father, and his friends a true counsel. Mr. Jackson's long residence in Janesville, his prominence in the city, his service to the city as superior, alderman and mayor.

ALFRED A. JACKSON.

or, his prominence in his chosen profession—having been chosen president of the Rock County bar association and later president of the state association, has made him a name that will be hard to fill. His death came quietly after a long illness which had sapped his strength but left him as clear as ever. Surrounded by his immediate family, his devoted wife, his children, his son-in-law, and his friends, he passed peacefully away at his home, a true Christian, a gentleman and scholar.

Alfred A. Jackson was born Aug. 8, 1831, in the town of Verona, Oneida county, New York. After completing a course in the public schools he entered the law at Rome, N. Y., but failing sight compelled him to forego the study. For some time he remained at home on his father's farm and he was able to take a position at a store. In April, 1855, he eyesight having been restored, he started for the west and shortly thereafter he was at Janesville.

He began the study of law in the office of Sloan and Patten on April 21, 1856, and finished his course in the office of Sloan and Norton. In April, 1856, he was admitted to the bar and since that time until his recent illness, has been continuously engaged in the practice of his profession.

In 1865 he was an ardent republican and the organization of that party did not aspire to leadership, though he served one year on the city board as supervisor, which position he later resigned. He represented the first ward in the common council two years and in 1868 he held office of mayor. For eight years he was one of the trustees of the school for the blind, and for four years president of the board.

Mr. Jackson was also highly honored in his profession. Since the formation of the state bar association he was prominently connected with its executive committee and recently held the chairmanship of its committee on public affairs. Mr. Jackson was the president of the Rock County Bar Association and filled that office several years. In February, 1888, he was admitted to practice before the United States supreme court.

He took a deep interest in all matters pertaining to the domain of American history. He was a member of the Wisconsin Historical Society and the American Historical Society. In 1892 he took college conferred upon him the degree of Master of Arts. Mr. Jackson possessed a kindly, genial disposition and he was highly respected by the community. ## TUESDAY MARKS END OF VACATION DAYS OF THE YOUNGSTERS

Bells of City Schools Will Summon Children Back to Duties Tomorrow.

Two thousand or more boys and girls return to their school duties on Tuesday. It will be with a spirit of loathing on the part of some, while others of a more studious nature will welcome their return to books and studies. There are some changes in the faculty of the schools which have been noted previously in these columns. A number of changes and improvements have been made in the buildings all of which have been thoroughly cleaned and renovated.

SEVEN HURT IN CRASH OF TWO FIRE TRUCKS

MOTOR TRUCK COLLIDES WITH HORSE DRAWN HOSE TRUCK NUMBER 1.

CHILDREN IN DANGER

Apparatus Was Speeding To Fire On South Locust Street When Two Vehicles Came Together.

Speeding to the home of Eusebius Leuter, 519 South Locust Street, in response to a fire alarm early last evening, the motor fire truck from Station No. 2, collided with horse-drawn truck No. 1 from the West Side Station at the corner of Pleasant and South High streets, overturning the latter, and injuring seven men riding on it.

Four of the number were firemen, one a member of the Fire Police, and two were not in either service. James Shortney, a fireman, was most seriously injured. With Glenn Snyder, a citizen, he was removed to Mercy hospital immediately after the accident, but after wounds had been attended to they were removed to their homes. Shortney, who received a bad gash over the eye, and may have been internally injured, was confined to his home today. Snyder received cuts in the head and had his arm badly bruised. William Scott and Henry Kressin, firemen, were badly bruised, the former having his leg injured. Assistant Chief Cornelius Murphy had the muscles of his leg injured and was severely bruised. Ed. Carpenter, of the fire police, had a leg injured and received bruises but was able to be about on crutches this morning. Jack McKinley was bruised about the head. Thomas Murphy, who was riding on the truck, jumped and escaped unhurt.

That the accident was an unavoidable one, such as occur in the street, is the opinion of Chief Henry Klein, who with Driver Roy Hanson, Fireman Benjamin Gaschke, Edward Lichtstuss and Patrick Gallagher, were riding on the motor-truck. This was proceeding west on Pleasant Street at a rate of speed between fifteen and twenty miles an hour. Just before High street was reached, Truck No. 1 was noticed approaching at high speed. Driver Hanson swung into the curb to avoid them, if possible, and the car went out, running faster than five or six miles an hour when it struck a glancing blow at the horse truck. It was stopped just as it got over the crosswalk. All the way Chief Klein rang the bell vigorously and at Franklyn the motor truck had slowed down as a precaution against collision with a street car. Driver Hanson had not calculated on meeting the other apparatus before Academy street where the crash occurred.

Child Endangered. In the excitement following the collision the fire was in danger of being forgotten but Chief Klein and as many of his men as he could gather hastened to give it attention. Adjoining the second floor of the home were in flames and full of smoke. Chief Klein was alone for about five minutes and hearing that two children were in one of the upper rooms, he broke out, entered it twice to make sure that they were not there. As many times he was brought to his knees by the smoke and heat and he suffered from the fumes when he came out to regain fresh air. By the children had made their escape and the fire was extinguished by the three small chemical extinguishers.

The cause of the fire is unknown but it is believed to have been caused by the explosion or overturning of a lamp in the room adjoining the children. The boys, Kenneth and Joseph Kuster, aged respectively nine and five years, their parents had retired down stairs and the first indication they had of the fire was when the little boys ran from the room. The news that the room adjoining theirs was on fire, it was necessary for them to pass through this coming down stairs but they escaped any injury.

Kuster turned in the fire alarm from box 43 about eight o'clock. John H. Kennedy, who was passing the house in his automobile, heard the children's cries and at once alighted and turned a bucket brigade of the neighbors who helped to carry the furniture from the home. Mr. and Mrs. Kuster lost practically their entire stock of clothing including that of the children and the loss will be about a hundred dollars. The wooden ceiling and partition were badly burned.

Horse Truck Wrecked. Horse truck No. 1 was practically wrecked in the collision and will have to be replaced. The oldest in the department, having been in service about nineteen years. Damage to the motor truck will come to about $250. It was not put out of commission until early this morning, and it is as good running shape as possible. A big dent was made in the radiator, the crankshaft, where it entered the engine, bent, and the searchlights bent and impossible to bend the lamps into shape. The crankshaft has been repaired but the radiator will have to be replaced.

The horse truck had the left rear wheel disbed beyond repair, a spoke broken out of the other rear wheel, springs and brake twisted out of position and other serious damage.

MONKEY HUNT LATEST SPORT IN MONTEREY

Four Little Beasts Escaped From Miller Show and Thought They Were Safe in the Jungles.

Not since the days of the Burr Robins show, when alligators, rhinoceros and other strange beasts wallowed in the waters of Spring Brook, has there been genuine wild beast hunt through the "jungles" until Sunday. Some way in the packing of the properties of the Miller carnival company early Sunday morning, four of the monkeys escaped to the "jungles", swimming from the shore to a small island where they thought they were immune.

The carnival men went on a loss to capture them and finally decided that a real and original monkey hunt would solve the problem. A bound belonging to August Schultz was procured and was sent in the tall swamp grass to root the monkeys from their hiding place.

The dog soon struck their trail and started to round them up so as the owners could capture them. When the four monkeys had been chased from one refuge to another, the monkey catchers were puzzled for the animals were just as handy in the water as on land. When the dog or men would come close to them they would make a near dive into the river and enjoy themselves swimming. Undaunted the four monkey catchers stripped and started after them in the water.

The cold water soon wore on the monkeys and William Sable, Harry Schumaker, Ellsworth Ashley and August Schultz each landed one of the escaped beasts. The animal man of the water, who had been chasing the monkeys with two dollars and so called the monkey chase ever held in this city and the monkeys returned to their cages to tell their friends of their strange adventures.

When the dog or men would come close to them they would make a near dive into the river and enjoy themselves swimming. Undaunted the four monkey catchers stripped and started after them in the water.

The cold water soon wore on the monkeys and William Sable, Harry Schumaker, Ellsworth Ashley and August Schultz each landed one of the escaped beasts. The animal man of the water, who had been chasing the monkeys with two dollars and so called the monkey chase ever held in this city and the monkeys returned to their cages to tell their friends of their strange adventures.

The dog soon struck their trail and started to round them up so as the owners could capture them. When the four monkeys had been chased from one refuge to another, the monkey catchers were puzzled for the animals were just as handy in the water as on land.

The Evening Chit-Chat

BY RUTH CAMERON

SHAM DEMOCRACY.

"If there is anything in this world I thoroughly hate, it's snobbishness. I heard a young woman declare the other day: 'I don't see why one person should think she's so much better than another just because she has a little more money or comes from a more aristocratic family. After all, it's what you are yourself, not what you have or who your parents are, that counts.' I wondered what had caused this sudden burst of democratic feeling. I was soon enlightened.

It is the kind of democracy that wants to level down but not up. When she says she doesn't see why one person should think she's any better than another, she means she doesn't see why anyone who has more money or a more aristocratic family than she should set themselves above her. She doesn't mean that she has no reason to set herself above those who are below her in the social scale, in fact I hope to know that she is quite as cruel to those she considers beneath her as the other woman was to her.

A great many people have just this kind of democratic feeling. Unless you are on the top or the bottom round of the social ladder there are always some people above you and some below, and the natural human instinct is to resent the former; fact as unjust and acquires in the latter as right and unavoidable.

I know a girl who stands behind a counter. She resents it bitterly because a former friend of hers who has become a stenographer looks down upon her. And yet I know that she looks down just as haughtily upon another girl who is a domestic worker.

Heart democracy, the golden spirit which counts all men as brothers, is very very beautiful, and in the last analysis, I believe it is the only force that will ever make this old world of our right. But sham democracy, the kind that levels down but not up, is as ugly as the real thing is beautiful.

Spicy Dishes Are a Joy to Cook.

"Sugar and spice and all things nice."

The cover did I realize how susceptible we all are to the delicious odors which arise while cooking "spicy" things, as when passing one of the greatest pickling and preserving establishments in the world in London last summer. It was always a question in our minds whether or not we would "pass," as it seemed for the most satisfying thing to do, to loiter around where we could feast on these delicious spicy odors.

The same is true in the home; the trouble is many women have been so afraid some of the odors from cooking would not be confined in the kitchen, but meet the family and travel at the front door. Let it travel sometimes for it is a very good way to draw the family home and they all like it.

Last fall while making pickles one day a little fish boy opened the school door and stood looking for a minute. Finally he said, "Gee, this smells like home!" Just the atmosphere we like to have around our kitchen and lecture auditorium.

Pickles are made from various fruits and vegetables such as peaches, pears, sweet apples, citron, watermelon rind, cucumbers, ripe and green; cauliflower, beans, peppers and carrots. These may be sweet or sour as desired and various mixtures and spices added which is best adapted for flavoring the particular fruit or vegetable being pickled. If sweet, the syrup should be cooked up thick; if rich, it is really preserving with the addition of spices and vinegar.

For sour pickles use only the best, pure cider or white wine vinegar; never boil it but scald only and pour over the pickles hot or cold. If the vinegar is too strong it will make the pickles soft or they will wrinkle and shrink. If there is any doubt add one-third water. Use a wooden spoon for any stirring.

A small piece of horseradish placed in each jar prevents mold.

Buy only the best and purest of spices if a finely flavored pickle is desired. If this is not done, the pickles do not retain the flavor of spice long.

Have on hand ready for use, white wine or cider vinegar; ground spices such as cinnamon, cloves, allspice, and whole mustard seed, cloves, celery

THINGS WORTH KNOWING.

To Clean Soiled Panama Hat.—Take equal parts of fine cornmeal and cornstarch, rub briskly over the hat with a soft cloth or piece of cotton. Then brush with a hat brush. Result will surprise you.

If you have trouble in getting your cake out of the pan, dust a little flour in the pan after it is greased well.

To prepare lime water, put a tea-cupful of clean, unslacked lime in a pitcher and pour over it two quarts of water, stirring thoroughly till it looks like milk. Let stand until the water seems quite clear then filter.

If your oven is too hot, a basin of cold water placed in it will soon lower the temperature.

THE TABLE.

Tomato, Walnut and Celery Salad.—Cut a round from stem end of peeled tomatoes. Scoop out seeds, leaving as much tomato as possible. Chop celery fine; cut picked walnuts small; mix with mayonnaise and fill spices, one-half teaspoonful of nutmeg, one-half teaspoonful of salt, one teaspoonful of soda, two tablespoonfuls of boiling water. Mix all thoroughly, then add the soda dissolved in the boiling water and steam for three hours. One cupful of cherries, peaches, strawberries or pineapple added to the above makes it equal to plum pudding. Serve with plain white sauce flavored with vinegar.

LET me live in my house by the side of the road. Where the race of men go by—They are good, they are bad, they are weak, they are strong, Wise, foolish—so am I, Then why should I sit in the scorner's seat?

Or hurt the cynic's ban? Let me live in my house by the side of the road And be a friend to man.

LUSCIOUS FIELD MUSHROOM.

This is the season for the full enjoyment of the inviting field mushroom; when we have plenty of rain the crop is abundant. During the months of July and August the mushrooms are more apt to be wormy than early or later in the season. It is wise to look the mushrooms over carefully before cooking.

All fungi should be avoided when overripe or attacked by slugs. The medium in which they grow often causes a disagreeable odor and flavor. Authorities differ as to the digestibility of mushrooms, but nearly all agree that their nutritive value has been vastly exaggerated, although their popularity will continue, as their flavor and attractiveness will always be held in high esteem.

Beefsteak and mushrooms may be enjoyed by the plainest of livers if the fungi may be gathered fresh in one's own neighborhood.

Mushroom Scramble.—Saute a cupful of mushrooms cut fine in two tablespoonfuls of butter with a half a dozen well beaten eggs. Cook until the egg is set, and serve on toast.

Deviled Mushrooms.—Mix a teaspoonful of mustard, a dash of cayenne, a teaspoonful of Worcestershire sauce and half a teaspoonful of paprika; cover broiled mushrooms with this mixture and serve on toast.

Broiled Mushrooms.—Put the mushrooms in a buttered broiler, cup side down; broil, then turn and put a bit of butter in each cup. Sprinkle with pepper and salt and serve as soon as the butter is melted.

Mushrooms Baked in Cream.—Prepare the mushrooms, arrange in a baking dish, season and pour over sufficient cream to cover. Sprinkle with crumbs and bake. Serve from the baking dish.

Ghosts as Dreams.

The probability that we get snatches of sleep at odd moments when we suppose ourselves to have remained continuously awake is supported by the phenomena of dreams. Mark Twain accounted for his own "disappearing visitor" by the belief that he had unconsciously had a very short nap; and many have explained visions of ghosts as due to dreams during such short naps.

PRETTY DRESS OF WHITE WOOL CREPE

HEART and HOME PROBLEMS

By MRS. ELIZABETH THOMPSON

Dear Mrs. Thompson: I am a girl of sixteen.

- (1) My neck and arms tan very easily, what will whiten them?
- (2) Do you think it proper for a girl to go roller skating if she is with someone older than herself?
- (3) Which is the very best way to wash-viole?
- (4) Which should speak first, the boy or girl?
- (5) Keep them well covered and bathe them every night in butter-milk. Lemon juice is also good, but is apt to irritate a tender skin.
- (6) The older person is entirely respectable and if her parents give their consent, I see no harm in it.
- (7) Cotton viole may be washed with a good white soap and water the same as any cotton goods. If it is colored, color should be "set" before washing.
- (8) The girl, though if they are intimate friends they need not be formal.

Dear Mrs. Thompson: Could you please advise me how to decorate a country home for a wedding to take place the latter part of August, to have it simple and attractive, but inexpensive? A DAILY READER.

I should think nothing could be prettier than to decorate the house with fall flowers, either those growing wild or in the garden.

A little altar of ferns and flowers might be built in the room where the ceremony will take place, of ferns and flowers.

If you serve a meal to your guests, suspend over the table a huge wedding bell, to be made of flowers, or flowers and tulle or crêpe paper. From the center inside of the bell have ribbons radiate to each place where each ribbon is tied about a little box bearing a piece of wedding cake.

Dear Mrs. Thompson: I am a girl of fifteen and weigh 114 pounds. Do you think I weigh too much? I am about five feet two inches high. My friend, who is sixteen, is five feet three inches and weighs 120 pounds. Is that too much? TWO CHUMS.

You are both a little heavy for your size and age.

The Theater

"THE SPENDTHRIFT."

Among the most pleasing of last season's plays touring the West, were two productions well remembered for their excellence in point of cast, equipment and purity of atmosphere. One of these was the play, "The Thief" by Henri Bernstein and "The Great Divide" by William Vaughn Moody, under the management of C. S. Primrose. Of all the plays produced here within the last few years at moderate prices, the most pleasing from a standpoint of real theatrical was the offering of "The Thief" with Miss Marion Sherwood and difficult role, as Marie Louise Voysin, the erring wife who became a thief. None of these fortunate enough to obtain seats in the Myers Theater last season, have forgotten the real treat they enjoyed in following Miss Sherwood through her intense scenes of wonderful acting on that occasion. Gifted with an unusually rare Southern type of beauty—a clear enunciation born in the cultivation of a rich contralto voice and arrayed by the most bewitching charms, combined with a most winning grace of manner, pleasing personality and great dramatic talent, Miss Sherwood's theatrical appearance from coast to coast is heralded as the red-letter event of the season. Recently, in Bloomington, Ill., the home of Margaret Livingston, the newspaper men and dramatic critics proclaimed Miss Sherwood's success equal to that of Miss Livingston in the original production. Inspired by such flattering results of her success, Mr. C. S. Primrose is this season presenting Miss Sherwood in the new starring vehicle, "The Spendthrift," a play dealing with the present important problem of the high cost of living from the pen of Porter Emerson Browne, author of "A Fool There Was" and other American dramatic successes.

MARION SHERWOOD IN "THE SPENDTHRIFT" AT THE MYERS THEATRE THIS AFTERNOON AND EVENING.

"The Spendthrift" offers a subject even superior to "The Thief" in point saken her the innocent wife leaves her home and becomes a governess avoiding pitfalls and temptations of Greater New York for her own sake and for that of her husband, whom she still loves. Investigation of her more mature consideration of facts have in the meantime convinced the husband, now reduced to a small salary position—that his wife and not himself, has been the wronged one, and the final discovery of her whereabouts and their reconciliation, furnishes a happy conclusion to a play which leaves a satisfying and thoughtful impression long after the story is ended at the fall of the curtain in the last act.

"The Spendthrift" will appear at the Myers Theater on Monday, September 1, matinee and evening.

They Had.

Three-year-old was listening to the photograph. It was singing a duet—an elaborate operatic selection for soprano and a contralto voice. When it ended he approached closer to the machine, peered into the horn and then asked: "Mamma, have the ladies gone away?"

Every Day Talks for Every Day People

By FRANCIS JOYCE KENNEDY

"The thing that goes the furthest toward making life worth while, that costs the least, and is the most, is just a pleasant smile. The smile that bubbles from the heart that loves its fellow-men will drive away the cloud of gloom and coax the sun again. It's full of worth and goodness, too, with human kindness blent. It's worth a million dollars and it doesn't cost a cent."

The dimples of encouragement are good for me and you. It pays a higher interest for it is merely lent—worth a million dollars and it doesn't cost a cent.

A smile comes very easy—you can wrinkle up with cheer a hundred times before you can squeeze out a soggy tear. It ripples out, moreover, to the heart strings that will tug. And always leaves an echo that is very like a hug. So, smile away. Folks understand what a smile is meant, when it's worth a million dollars and it doesn't cost a cent.

There is no room for sadness when we see a cherry smile. I know has the same good look—it's So, it nerves us on to try again, when failure makes us blue.

If You Are Not a Better Cook Than Your Mother Was, What Is the Reason?

Think how much easier it is for you to do your cooking on a Canet Gas Range than it was for her to do her cooking on a coal stove.

She used wood or coal, with all the labor they mean; coal to dry, wood to chop, ashes to remove, dirt to clean up.

Today you can cook with Gas with far less work and in a most comfortable kitchen. The gas is piped direct to the burner of your range. A match kindles the fire and a cook regulates it. When you are through cooking turn off the gas and the expense stops.

Modernize your kitchen today and cook with Gas.

"That," said Darrow, "is the first fruit of my laudable tendencies. I stole that from the mayor's office in the City Hall."

"What is it?"

"That," said Darrow, "I do not know."

He deposited the bag carefully by his chair, and turned, smiling, to Helen.

"Goodby," said he. "Sleep tight."

They went out. Darrow seated himself in his chair, drew his hat over his eyes, and fell into a doze. In the meantime, outside, all through the city, hell was getting ready to pop.

CHAPTER XXI.

In the Race of Eternity.

Hell popped just as soon as the newspapers could get out their extras.

Monseigneur X had at last struck, and both interest and belief urged the managing editors to last to give publicity to all the theories, the facts, and the latest message from the fanatic Unknown.

The latter came about three o'clock:

"To the People: You have defied me, and you have outwitted my power. There is no good in you. I, who would have saved you, must now bring about your death as a sinner and a stiff-necked generation. Inhumanity is no more, and of the world I desire nothing more. Prepare within the next three hours to appease a mightier throne than mine."

Percy Darrow, reading this, said to Jack Warford: "It is time to act," and, accompanied by the younger man, quietly left the room.

The reader's imagination—and no other will read this tale—must figure to himself the island of Manhattan during the next two hours. The entire population, nearly, tried to leave it at once. When the suburban dwellers, urged slyly by the desire for a hot dinner, attempted to return home between five and six, the ways are congested enough. Now, stricken with the fear of death, the human cattle fought frantically to reach the inadequate exits of the great theater of tragedy.

There was waiting in the streets, and panic, and stark rumor, of course; and there was terror, and coolness, and the taking of thought. To the little group of men in the top floor of the Atlas Building the roar of riot came up like the thunder of the orchestra before the rise of the curtain. Most of the people in the streets fled from a danger they did not understand. This little group in the wireless office realized clear what still and frozen dissolution was rising of the curtain would disclose. They were not many; and they did it know what they were to do, if any; but they had not run away.

Eldridge withered, looking somewhat flustered the first time in his life, and four large committee that had emptied him. Simmons sat calmly at his desk, and of all the reporters Hallowell alone had stood by. He had faith in Darrow, and he knew that in the speech office a little handful of men in the shadow of death on the chance of the biggest scoop since Noah's flood.

The four solitizens looked at one another. Thibodeau turned to Eldridge.

"Then your opinion is that the city is doomed?"

"I can offer other solution, sir," said the scientist. "It is at last evident that this man's power over etheric vibrations tends to those forming heat-rays. This is so, it follows that he can cut off life by stopping all heat. If heat is carried out, we can but it forward to a repetition on a large scale of the City Hall affair."

The aged cleric now spoke to Simmons.

"And the report from the searchers?" he asked formally.

"The search being pursued, sir," replied the cleric, "by twenty thousand men, there remain some fifty miles of entry to go over, Mr. Lyons."

Lyons turned his shaggy head toward a plump, slim, keen-eyed man of fifty.

"And they will, in your judgment, Mr. Perk, take how long to empty?"

"Days," the present confusion," said Perk shortly. "We can move only a limited percentage. Thank God, most of the men are standing by. I think all the rolling stock is moving."

Lyons added twice.

"And if," he asked the third of the party, stout young man of thirty-eight or so.

"How many stations are on the job, Simmons?" asked this man.

"All right, sir," replied the operator. "Did I don't answer. I guess they beat."

"How do they report the bulletin men?"

"On the job," replied the wireless man.

The stout young man turned to Lyons.

"Well, it," said he, "I don't know whether or the hand of death will be called to quiet them"—he paused for an instant with uplifted hand; the roar and crash and wall of the city-wide stirred into the gap of his silence—but if it is we, he went on, "our little arrangements are made. My men know what to do, and my men are on the job," he concluded proudly.

Lyons added again.

"We've all done our best," said he. "We, gentlemen, I do not see how we possibly accomplish anything more by remaining here. My automobile in concealment in the old stable at the rear of 127. My yacht is standing off the Battery awaiting signal. I come in. We have," he glanced at his watch, "over an hour before a threatened catastrophe."

He looked up expectantly. The men all gazed uneasily at one another, except Simmons, who stared at his batteries slyly.

"Come gentlemen," urged Lyons, after a moment. "There is really not much time to lose, for you know the yacht is steam beyond the danger zone."

"Best," spoke up Simmons, at last. "There isn't any good of you here. If anything comes in, I can handle it. It's just a case of send out orders to your men."

"I think I better stay," observed Paige, the stout young man, with an air of bluff. "I know I'm not much use; if I've placed men, and they'll stick; and if this freeze-out proposition goes through—why, they're in it, and—"

"That's how I feel," broke in Perkins. "But you have done your full duty, Mr. Lyons, and you have no reason to stay. Let me get your car around you—"

"Oh, I'm going to stay," said Lyons. "If you gentlemen feel it your duty, how much more is it mine! Professor Eldridge—he bowed to the scientist—"you have done your best, which is more than any other mortal man could have done. I am sure; and you, sir," he said to Hallowell.

Eldridge and Hallowell shook their heads.

"I have failed," said Eldridge.

"I am a reporter," said Hallowell.

"We are in the hands of God," announced Lyons with great solemnity, and laid his hands over his white waistcoat.

At that moment the door slowly swung open and Percy Darrow entered. He was smoking a cigarette, his hands were thrust deep in his trousers pockets; he was hatless, and his usually smooth hair was rumpled. A tiny round showed just above the middle of his forehead, from which a stream of blood had run down to his shoulders. He surveyed the room with a humorous twinkle shining behind his long lashes.

"Well, well, well, well!" he remarked in a cheerful tone of voice. "This is a nice jolly, Quaker meeting! Why don't you get out and make a noise and celebrate, like your friends outside?"

"Thought you'd ducked," remarked Hallowell. The others said nothing, but looked a grave disapproval.

Darrow laughed.

"No, I had to come back to see how Eldridge is getting on." He cast a glance at the scientist. "How goes it, old fellow?" he inquired.

The man's manner, the tone of his voice, seemed so much out of place in his atmosphere of solemnity as a penny whistle in a death chamber. Darrow refused to notice the general attitude of disapproval, but planted himself in front of Eldridge.

"All in?" he challenged. "Or do you still cherish any delusions that you want Ads are money makers."

Leading by the Arm a Strange and Nondescript Figure.

will get your man inside of"—he looked at his watch—"eleven minutes?"

A visible stir ran through the room at these words. "Eleven minutes!" murmured Lyons, and held his watch to his ear. "It has stopped," he said aloud. "It seems, gentlemen, that the only possible hope for us lies in the doubt as to whether or not this Unknown will carry out his threat."

"He's a first-rate hand to carry out threats," observed Darrow.

"We have done our best," said Lyons calmly. "Let us compose ourselves to meet everything—or nothing—as the fates may have decided."

"That's all right," agreed Darrow, with unabated cheerfulness. "But Eldridge and I had a little agreement, or bet. He bragged he'd get this Monsieur X before I did. I'd like to know how he feels about his end of it. Give it up?"

Eldridge looked at him rebukingly. "I have failed," he acknowledged formally, "from lack of time to carry out my investigation."

"From lack of brains," said Darrow brutally. "I believe you once said in private conversation about my old master, Dr. Schermerhorn. These things are remembered. I am delighted to hand this back to you." He eyed Eldridge, the brilliant smile still curving his lips.

"Enough of this!" cried Lyons with authority. "This is unseemly in the face of eternity."

Darrow looked again at his watch.

"We have still six minutes, sir; and this is an affair of long standing, and on which I feel deeply. The score is settled," he said with entire respect. "I am now at your command. I had intended," he went on in a frivolous tone again, "to kick you on my gas bill. It is too large. You, as responsible head, know it is. But somehow, you know, the presence here of you gentlemen has disarmed me. You don't need to be here; you all have the facilities to get away. Here you are! I guess you can charge a dollar and a quarter for gas if you want to." He looked from one to another while he carefully wiped back the blood that was flowing from the little wound in his forehead. "Eldridge acknowledges he has failed," he repeated.

"I fail to see how you have improved upon that failure," snapped Eldridge, stung.

"No?" queried Darrow. "I call Hallowell to witness that the game has been fair. We had an even start; the data have been open to both." He raised his voice a little. "Jack!" he called.

Immediately through the open door from the hall outside came Jack Warford, leading by the arm a strange and nondescript figure. It was that of a small, bent, old-looking man, dressed in a faded suit of brown. His hair was thin, and long, and white; his face sharp and lean. His gaze was fixed straight before him, so that every one in the room at the same instant caught the glare of his eyes.

They were fixed, those eyes, like an owl's, or better, a wildcat's, as though they never winked. From the pupils, which were very small, the little light-colored lines radiated across very large blue irises. There was something baleful and compelling in their glare, so that Hallowell, cool customer as he was, forgot immediately all about the man's littleness and shabbiness and bent figure, and was conscious only of the cruel, clever, watchful, unrelenting, hostile spirit. As Jack dragged him forward, the others could see that one foot shambled along the floor.

"Gentlemen," observed Darrow in his most casual tones, "let me present Monsieur X!"

Every one exclaimed at once. Above the hubbub came Lyons' voice, clear and commanding: "The proof!" he thundered. "This is too serious a matter for buffoonery. The proof!"

Percy Darrow raised his hand. Through the roar of the maddened city the bell of the Metropolitan tower was beginning its chimes. By the third stroke the uproar had died almost away. The people were standing still, awaiting what might come.

The sweet-toned chimes ceased. There succeeded the pause. Then the great bell began to boom.

One—two—three—four—five—six came its spaced and measured strokes. The last reverberations sank away. Nothing happened. Percy Darrow let his hand fall.

"The proof," he repeated, "is that you are still here."

From the night outside rose a wild shriek of rejoicing, stupendous, overwhelming, passionate. Paige sprang across the room. "Release!" he shouted fairly in Simmons' ear. The spark crashed. And at a dozen places simultaneously bulletins flashed; at a dozen other points placarded balloons arose, on which the search-lights played; so that people, hesitating in their flight in thankfulness over finding themselves still alive, raised their eyes and read:

"Monsieur X is captured. You are safe."

At that a tumult arose, a tumult of rejoicing.

Darrow had sauntered to the window, and was looking out. From the great height of the Atlas Building he could see abroad over much of the city. Here and there, like glowing planets, hung the balloons.

"Clever idea," he observed. "I'm glad you thought of it."

Hallowell was on his feet, his eyes shining.

"I've got the only paper on the job!" he fairly shouted. "Darrow, as you love me, give me the story. Where was he? Where did you get him?"

Darrow turned from the window, and sarcastically surveyed Eldridge.

"He was in the office next door," said he, after a moment.

Dinner Stories

The amenities of political campaigning are amusingly illustrated by a story told by a southern congressman.

It appears that during the course of a stump speech delivered some years ago by John Sharp Williams in Mississippi he was interrupted by a sudden yell from a man in the audience.

"I have been robbed by pickpockets!"

"I did not know that there were any Republicans present," promptly suggested Mr. Williams, in order to get a laugh.

"Oh, there ain't, there ain't!" roared the unhappy man. "I'm the only one!"

Pat and Mike were on a roof removing the old shingles. Pat, slipping them off with a pick and Mike tossing them in great armfuls to the street below.

As Mike was making his way along with an extra heavy load he slipped and slid down the roof sweeping Pat off his feet and along with him. As they went over the edge, Pat's pick caught in the drain trough and there he hung.

With one desperate grasp Mike managed to cling to one of Pat's legs, and they dangled there some moments, too frightened to peep.

Finally Pat yelled:

"Mike, let go me leg!"

"I will not," muttered Mike.

"Mike, let go me leg!" called Pat, madly.

"If you don't let go me leg I'll hit ye with this pick."

Danger in Cigar Cutters.

The German health officials are considering abolishing the device for cutting off the ends of cigars that form a familiar part of the equipment of tobacco shops. It is alleged that many smokers make use of the instrument after having already placed the cigar in their mouths and therefore render possible the transfer of germs to other smokers.—Medical Record.

UNCLE WALT

The Poet Philosopher

Copyright, 1909, by George Matthew Adams

BY WALT MASON

Two dozen hoppers hunted grass upon a western farm; they played among the garden sassa, and did but little harm. On nimble legs each hopped around, and winked the other eye, and by the farmer they were found, as he went creaking by. The farmer went to Grocer Ware: "Grasshoppers are among my hay, I saw ten thousand there. The grocer quickly spread the news. The hoppers are on deck! They even cut the farmers' shoes and window blinds, by heck!"

The printer of the Weekly Dirk did justice to the tale; he let his bubbling fancy work, and shocked the country folk. All over the country went the yarn about the farmer's woe; of how the hoppers ate his hay, and laid his cornfields low. They swarmed around in such a cloud that they obscured the sun, and eastern readers swore, aloud, "that country takes the bun!"

Two dozen hoppers on a beam surveyed the country wide, and little did those hoppers dream how they had multiplied. A few brief hours they frolicked round, and sported in the hay; and still that husky lie lived on, and traveled far and near, and people said, "So help me John, that country's mighty queer!"

GOOPS

By GELETT BURGESS

Mary had a little lamb,
But it sure could not keep.
For ere a year had passed away
It was a great big sheep.
Find a lamb.

THE LAMB'S FINISH.

Then a naughty butcher came,
Wise in the art of sham,
And next day on his counter
The sheep again was lamb.

PUBLIC NOTICE.

Persons Answering Fraudulent Advertisements Asked to Notify Gazette.

The Gazette is desirous of keeping out of its columns, fraudulent advertising and asks the assistance of its patrons to that end.

There are any number of concerns in the country who make a living through a nicely worded advertisement, offering golden opportunities, and these unscrupulous people find fertile ground for work among the masses.

Many orders are received in the Gazette mail for advertising which are returned as objectionable and where there is a question as to the qualifications the advertisement is omitted. All newspapers have this experience.

But even with the utmost care there will be an occasional advertisement which will pass the scrutiny of the business department of the paper and find its way into the columns.

The Gazette will deem it a favor if you will report to the office any trouble which may have been experienced through the answering of such an advertisement.

WISCONSIN WOMEN DEMAND LITERATURE ON SUFFRAGE ISSUE

Such is Indication Judging From Record at Rock County Library of University Extension Department.

"Votes for Women" leads all other subjects under consideration now in Wisconsin. If the records of the package library department of the University of Wisconsin extension division are any indication of thought currents, and women are the greatest users of the public sources of information, according to the same records.

Within the past year a great increase has taken place in the use of this branch of the university service to urban and rural communities. The loan of 2,329 libraries in the past twelve months to 247 communities is an increase of 15 per cent over the number of libraries loaned the year previous and of almost 11 per cent over the year served that year.

In all 113,160 different articles in discussion of 1,030 subjects were sent out, a remarkable increase of over 50 per cent more subjects than were furnished in response to the inquiries of the year before. In addition information on different topics was furnished through 1,112 personal letters from those in charge of the extension work in debating and public discussion. They thought they were busy the year before with 977 personal letters of information besides their regular work, but this year's record is almost 14 per cent greater.

Madison, being closer to the base of supplies, naturally led all localities in the number of package libraries borrowed, 114; and Milwaukee, in spite of its fine library facilities, was second, borrowing 64 packages. Prairie du Chien, La Crosse and Antigo were next with 38 each. Stevens Point and Phillips borrowed 35 each; Beaver Dam, 34 each; Ashland, Ladell and Washburn, 33 each; Tompkins, New London, Oshkosh and Fredburg, 29 each; Barab, 28; Wausau, 27; Evansville, 26; Plattville, Menomonie, DeForest and Body 25 each; Cashton, Randolph, Rice Lake and Waupun 24 each; Appleton, Florence and St. Francis 23 each; and Jefferson, Pepin, Sun Prairie and Whitewater 20 each. There were besides 312 other cities, towns and rural communities which borrowed 1 to 50 of the package libraries, some of them for the first time.

While this year's demand on women's suffrage shows a decrease to 132 packages from 255 the year preceding, the state on women's suffrage amendment, that question leads in interest throughout the state and the department is preparing to supply at least 400 packages this winter. Second in point of interest were the purely Wisconsin topics, such as Wisconsin education, government, history, industries, and legislation. There were 127 such libraries borrowed this year as compared with 84 last year.

Evidently the minds of the people were nearly as busy with the income tax, for 124 libraries on it were borrowed, twenty more than in the year 1911-12. Information on women's suffrage was also proved increasingly popular as 78 packages were sent out, and the interest in tariff rose in even greater proportion, 61 packages being loaned this year to 35 last year.

Many found the use of schools as social centers an absorbing topic of discussion and borrowed 49 collections of articles on it. The commission form of government, on the contrary, seemingly less ground, only 48 libraries on the subject being loaned as compared with 103 a year ago. Popular election of senators, conservation, civic improvement, the government ownership of railroads, the prevention and cure of tuberculosis, home economics, industrial education, prison reform, and other subjects shared in popularity as topics of discussion and debate.
